INCREASED LIVING. The high price of nearly everything that one eats is producing an agitation throughout the land. There is no state, town or community in which the subject is not felt and discussed.

It may well be a matter of popular concern, for within the memory of an overwhelming majority of people now living, the cost of food stuffs to the consumer have well nigh doubled. Various causes are given or guessed for the increased cost to the Consumer. Great quantities of food are held in cold storage elevators and otherwise for increased prices. The commission merchants and green grocers are coming in for a deal of criticism. The Secretary of Agriculture says that there are too many grocers.

Senator Dolliver says that too many men and women are living in the cities, and all say that this country through extravagance and prosperity has encouraged high prices and wastefulness until the means of life are more difficult here than in those countries that we once referred to with pity and contempt as the "effect monarchies."
